Reed's MALS program is intended for those individuals who wish to pursue interdisciplinary graduate work in a rigorous program that is both flexible and individually designed. An alternative to the highly specialized study characteristic of most graduate programs, it attracts a diverse group of bright, motivated students of varied ages and backgrounds. Reed classes usually are offered as small conferences that involve a good deal of interaction, as well as extensive analytical reading and writing. The academic pace is fast and the program of study demanding.

In what capacity and for how long have you known the applicant?

What are the first words that come to mind to describe the applicant?

In your opinion, how would this applicant respond to the environment described above?

How does this applicant respond to constructive criticism?

How would you assess the applicant's strengths and weaknesses as a writer, thinker, and speaker?

Please comment on the applicant's intellectual curiosity, motivation, and commitment to academic goals.
