

Economics 314
Daily Question #13

Spring 2013
February 27

On a microeconomic level, what factors should an individual consider in deciding whether to supply resources (labor or capital) to the goods-producing sector vs. the knowledge-producing sector? How can the latter earn revenue so that inputs to knowledge-production can be paid? Can we reconcile profitable production of knowledge with our assumption that all knowledge produced is freely available for use by everyone?